

Policy Developments and the Puerto Rican Pipeline

_ [1]

In order to develop solutions as to how to improve the Puerto Rican education pipeline, it is important to stay abreast of the current sociopolitical context of the education that Puerto Rican students are receiving. To this effect, Centro works to gather and disseminate up-to-date information on current policies and their effects on Puerto Rican students.

As part of this effort, we have created a database of articles relevant to the Puerto Rican education pipeline. Some of the bibliographic citations included in this database are specific to Puerto Rican students while others are more general but address issues of policy that we believe are important to understanding the experiences of Puerto Rican students in US schools.

The database will be updated on a regular basis as new policy developments emerge relevant to Puerto Rican students.
